DOG TALES

she has settled for rolling it around with her nose like a barrel to knock loose more of the cheeseball dust.

I’ve also kept trash and other things I know she’ll get into up. No surprise, she’s destroyed so many newspapers and that’s one thing I have plenty of. She might be our biggest fan! She’s also chewed up things I want to get rid of – a couple of stress balls, a toy Broncos helmet given to my son as a gag gift that he left behind, dried out pens, almost empty boxes and junk mail.

Things she’s gotten a hold of that she shouldn’t have have included my shoes the one time I didn’t put them up, hand towels, a tube of toothpaste, one of my hats, and a cord connecting the printer to my laptop that I didn’t think to unhook. The cord was a complete loss (thankfully I have others to spare) but everything else I got to before she did much damage. I still have to scold her every now and then about not chewing on the furniture or dangling cords, but for the most part she has stopped doing that.

I try to find ways to wear her out. Since she likes to follow me up and down the stairs, I go upstairs more times than I need to and outside more than I have to.

Setting up a kiddo pool was also a good idea, as Sparky loves to splash around in it, especially in the heat of the day. But it only keeps her entertained for about two minutes. I decided it was smarter to put it outside, so I can more easily clean it, and because playing in the water gives my older dog Ruby a bit of a break from the puppy when I put them both out.

Having a large fenced-in back yard has also helped, as there’s plenty of tall grass, plants and sticks for her to get into and plenty of room to run around and chase Ruby. The neighbors’ dogs also have gotten her attention, but the squirrel that Ruby loves to chase has long since moved on.

Apparently the threat of a puppy in the mix too was too much for him to handle.

Having an older dog also helps. Ruby wasn’t quick to warm up to the puppy, but she has started to. I’ve caught them rolling around the grass and playing with each other in the back yard. Once, while Ruby was laying on the couch, the puppy tried to pounce on Ruby’s wagging tail a few times, even as Ruby growled at her to stop.

But not too harshly. I think sometimes the Golden Retriever is as amused by the puppy’s antics as I am.

INSIGHT KANSAS

(23%) expressed support for ending mail-in voting options.

Even fewer (11.6%) think voter fraud is a routine problem in Kansas.

The move to curtail mail-in voting in Kansas is not just a policy change—it’s a philosophical one.

It signals a departure from a long-standing tradition of making voting easier for those who cannot be physically present at the polls. From Civil War soldiers to modern-day students and retirees, mail-in voting has served as a vital tool for civic participation.

As the 2026 midterms approach and calls to eliminate mail-in ballots echo from the nation’s capitol, Kansans—both voters and lawmakers alike—face a pivotal choice: whether to uphold a long-standing democratic tradition or allow it to be quietly dismantled.

The debate is not merely about deadlines and delivery speeds, it’s about the kind of democracy Kansans want to preserve. Will it be one that adapts to the needs of its citizens, or one that narrows the path to the ballot box?

In the end, the question isn’t whether mail-in voting is convenient. It’s whether it’s essential.

History suggests it is.
