Sen. Roger Marshall, left, visits with Jason Stephens of Erie Market, middle, and Erie Mayor Lester "Butch" Klingenberg during the senator's stop in Erie last week.

"I like to get to Southeast Kansas and to get to a variety of businesses," Marshall explained. "This is the only grocery store to stop at on this particular trip."

Prior to leaving Erie, Marshall also shared the following with The Record on his trip through Southeast Kansas. The senator commented on a constant theme from his stops during the week.

"It is all the manufacturing jobs — all the businesses that we ran into and sat down with," he said. "They have seen a big jump the last two or three weeks because of the tariffs going on in foreign countries."

"So everyone is wanting to buy American (products) now. They like the quality of the merchandise as well as the opportunity of long-term stability."

"I think as agriculture still goes to Kansas, I see it as a win getting a farm bill done. I think that is up front and up center and certainly these tariffs have created some controversy as well and people are wanting to know what's the end game going to look like."

"Over and over, the places I go to, I hear them express support for President Trump. They are so happy he secured the border — that he is doing what he said he would do."

"The price of gas has come down. It wasn't too long ago, it was $4 a gallon. Everywhere across the state, I'm seeing $2.50, $2.60 a gallon. Inflation has stabilized. Regulations are being rolled back."

"So really the first time since Covid, I think I sense a message of hope. People are hopeful this country is going back in the right direction."

Interesting Tidbits About Marshall

Marshall served from 2017 to 2021 at the U.S. representative for Kansas' 1st Congressional District, covering much of the western and northern parts of the state.

On Jan. 31, 2018, Marshall was a passenger on a chartered Amtrak train involved in the Crozet, Virginia train crash. He administered first aid and CPR to the injured.

The Red Devils dropped both games Monday against Caney. "We had too many missed opportunities," Mattox explained. "We started the game with an error, then we had another throwing error later in the inning and dug ourselves a hole. But then we managed to put the ball in play seven times in a row, which is huge progress for us. We've striking out at about a 45 percent clip as a team, so we worked before the game on changing our swing mechanics and the early results for most players were positive. It was good to get Eli on the mound and get some more innings than he has been getting."

"In the second game, once again we found ourselves behind early. I felt like after the second inning this would be a good time to get some of our younger players some varsity experience and they answered in a big way. What looked like what would be a three-inning game turned into six innings. I kept my senior in the field as 'field generals' to help teach the young guys and it worked out really well. Owen and Arthur were able to work a couple of walks in the fifth inning, and Bryson had a huge hit to extend the game for us."

"So I was proud of the young kids and I think this will go a long ways for them. We have a week off before we have 12 games in a two-week stretch."

I stare at the clock and wonder how in the world I could have slept for 9 1/2 hours. That doesn't seem possible at all. And yet it happens more than I like to admit.

The question I have is, how much sleep is too much? What is the right amount of sleep for a person my age?

Another aspect of this sleep problem is that I usually nap in the afternoon. I think I sleep more than I'm awake, which may be suitable for the people around me.

In all of my considerations about this, I must confess that I really enjoy sleeping. I'm not sure of any activity I enjoy more than this.

Thinking about this, I was reminded of what David said. "It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep." (Psalms 127:2).

Sleeping is a blessing from God.
