

Company that recalled lettuce associated with cyclospora now recalling possibly tainted jalapeños

Associated Press

Taylor Fresh Foods, parent company of Taylor Farms, is voluntarily recalling some products that include jalapeños because of worries about a possible salmonella contamination.

The announcement comes a few weeks after Taylor Farms voluntarily recalled its iceberg lettuce products sourced from central Mexico because of a potential link to a multistate cyclospora outbreak that has sickened people across the U.S.

Taylor Fresh Foods said that it was pulling some products including jalapeños from store shelves after finding out that Coast Citrus Distributors was voluntarily recalling fresh jalapeños due to a potential salmonella contamination.

Guacamole, pico de gallo and taco dip are some of the prepared foods included in the recall. The recalled products were distributed by Taylor Farms in multiple states with a “Best If Used By” date up to and including Aug. 16, 2026. The products were sold at stores including Kroger, Stop & Shop, Target, Whole Foods, Trader Joe’s and Walmart.

Taylor Fresh Foods said that the Food and Drug Administration and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention were working with state and local partners to investigate illnesses in a multistate outbreak of salmonella infections linked to fresh jalapeños supplied by Coast Citrus Distributors. The company said that a grower in Sinaloa, Mexico, a supplier to Coast Citrus Distributors, was identified as the potential source in the outbreak.

Taylor Fresh Foods said that it is no longer sourcing products from the farmer and will be filling orders from alternative suppliers. The company is currently not aware of any reported illnesses linked to its products containing jalapeños.

Consumers who have any recalled product are advised to discard it immediately and not eat it. Refunds are available at the location of purchase.

Consumers with any questions can contact Taylor at 855-455-0098 Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Central Time.

was defeated 59% to 41%.

“In many ways, this was an easier message for the ‘no’ folks than in 2022,” Beatty said. “It had that element of not just being involved with the abortion debate, but asking voters, ‘Hey, you want more politics in your life?’ And the answer obviously was a resounding no.”

He said organizations and individuals opposed to this year’s proposed amendment were able to draw on the same coalition that prevailed four years ago.

“I think they succeeded because they were still riding the wave of 2022,” Beatty said.

Beatty said advocates of the 2026 amendment didn’t provide voters with a persuasive argument that an overtly politicized court could deliver fair legal decisions.

emphasized his vote for tax legislation signed by the president.

Since capturing the nomination, Hamilton has needled Marshall about the rising cost of living, war with Iran and questions about whether the senator should be considered a resident of Florida or Kansas. Marshall says his official residence is Great Bend, where he worked as a physician before being elected to Congress.

Until Hamilton announced his candidacy in April, Beatty said Marshall was looking at a collection of Democratic challengers who didn’t have the ability to raise enough money to be competitive in November. The landscape shifted when Hamilton, who leads the Church of the Resurrection in Johnson County, raised $1 million in his campaign’s first week. In the latest campaign reporting period, Hamilton outraised Marshall.

“The Kansas Senate race by the end of it, by November, will be the No. 1 Senate race nationally in the United States,” Beatty said.

Masterson v. Holscher

On Nov. 3, state Sen. Ty Masterson, an Anderson Republican, and state Sen. Cindy Holscher, an Overland Park Democrat, will be the major party options on the ballot in the contest for Kansas governor.

In the GOP primary,

Masterson squeezed out other prominent Republicans after scoring Trump’s endorsement in May.

“My guess is, once Trump endorsed, (Masterson) was at, you know, maybe 40 points, and just sort of ... coasted through the election,” Beatty said. “It’s pretty tough to go against the president of the United States, but it’s particularly tough in the current Republican political environment.”

Holscher didn’t secure the primary endorsement from outgoing Democratic Gov. Laura Kelly. That went to Sen. Ethan Corson, who finished second in last week’s Democratic primary.

While Corson had resources to push television and radio advertising, Holscher relied more on messaging through social media and streaming ads. Holscher also took an anti-establishment approach in the primary, Beatty said.

“We got to give her credit,” Beatty said. “Those things, I think, worked and they’re effective. She used a lot of humor in her messaging and her videos, and some of the younger people were talking about it.”

Holscher and Masterson spoke during their campaigns about the need for property tax relief, the merits of massive economic development incentives as well as investment in public education. Both requested political unity among voters who supported other candidates for governor in the primary.

After bitter primary contests, Beatty said, it was absurd so many candidates offered swift endorsements of their former opponents.

“One of the things that gives politicians a bad name is how quickly they turn after a primary and say, ‘Oh, all that stuff I said, don’t worry about it,’” Beatty said.

On the amendment

Beatty said advocates of the proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution requiring Kansas Supreme Court justices to be elected didn’t learn from the 2022 election, when voters rejected a constitutional amendment designed to nullify a Supreme Court decision guaranteeing abortion rights.

The judicial election amendment on Tuesday’s ballot failed 61% to 39%, while the previous abortion amendment was defeated 59% to 41%.

“In many ways, this was an easier message for the ‘no’ folks than in 2022,” Beatty said. “It had that element of not just being involved with the abortion debate, but asking voters, ‘Hey, you want more politics in your life?’ And the answer obviously was a resounding no.”

He said organizations and individuals opposed to this year’s proposed amendment were able to draw on the same coalition that prevailed four years ago.

“I think they succeeded because they were still riding the wave of 2022,” Beatty said.

Beatty said advocates of the 2026 amendment didn’t provide voters with a persuasive argument that an overtly politicized court could deliver fair legal decisions.
