

Why wait until spring? Strawberries can be planted this fall.

By Pat Melgares, K-State Extension News Service

Kansas gardeners may have more flexibility than they realize when it comes to planting strawberries, according to research at Kansas State University.

While many gardeners traditionally plant strawberries from mid-March to early April, when soil can be worked, preliminary research by at K-State's Olathe Horticulture Research-Extension Center indicates that

June-bearing strawberries also can be successfully planted in late summer and early fall.

The research is currently being conducted by Ravneet Sandhu, a research assistant professor at the Olathe location.

"Fall provides an often-overlooked window for establishing June-bearing strawberries in Kansas," K-State horticulture expert Matt McKernan said. "(The university's) initial findings show that plants can be established from late August through late September without negatively affecting yield or fruit quality."

Researchers have studied annual plasticulture strawberry production at the Olathe center since 2024. In this system, strawberries are grown in raised beds covered with plastic mulch, typically with drip irrigation beneath the mulch. Plants are established each year and removed after a single fruiting season, generally from May through June.

McKernan says the timing of fall planting is important, however. Strawberries planted too late may not become sufficiently established or accumulate enough growing degree days -- a measure of heat accumulation used to track plant development -- to produce an adequate spring crop.

K-State researchers also tested whether floating row covers could provide an advantage during fall establishment. The study used the June-bearing cultivar "Ruby June," planted in late August, mid-September and late September in 2024 and 2025.

According to McKernan, some rows received lightweight row covers for two weeks after planting, while others remained uncovered. Researchers then used a heavier row cover on all plants during winter to provide protection from cold temperatures.

"The row covers did increase cumulative growing degree days during fall establishment in both years," McKernan said. "However, that increase did not translate into a significant difference in overall yield or fruit quality the following spring."

The findings suggest Kansas growers do not necessarily need to limit June-bearing strawberry planting to spring, if adequate winter protection can be provided to the plants.

"Planting from late August through late September appears to be a viable option for annual June-bearing strawberry production," McKernan said. "That gives growers another opportunity to establish plants under conditions that can be favorable for root and plant growth."

McKernan added that researchers continue to learn about which strawberry cultivars perform best under Kansas growing conditions.

Preliminary results indicate the cultivar Chandler may be a strong choice, with consistently competitive yields across two seasons of research. Camino Real, Keystone and Fronteras also showed strong yield potential during their first year of data collection in 2025-26.

Crossroads Quilt Guild

The August 17th meeting of the Crossroads Quilt Guild was called to order at 6:30 p.m. with refreshments brought by Nikki Miestrell and Linda Gardner. Roll Call was taken, and 12 members were present, with a couple of finished projects.

Minutes were approved, with Betty Bedore making a motion to approve, and seconded by Diane Maddy. The motion carried. Diane Maddy gave the Treasurer's Report. A motion was made by Jennifer Guffey and seconded by Linda Stamper to approve. The motion carried.

Sew Days are as follows: Plainville had four, and Stockton had none. The next Sew Days are as follows: September 9th for Plainville and September 12th for Stockton. We need to register for Nicole's Sew Days to get an accurate count.

Old Business: Nine participated at the Fair booth.

Under New Business is the Fund Raiser Quilt. Diane Maddy and Betty Bedore will draw the winner's name on September 6th, and it will be videoed so everyone can see the name being drawn.

The Committee Report discussed the VFW-donated fund for Quilts of Valor. The Committee determined that $100.00 would be used per quilt to reimburse the quilter for supplies used to create the QOV quilts. The motion was made by Toni Anderson and seconded by Diane Maddy. The motion carried.

During Announcements, we received a thank-you from Linda Gardner.

Our next meeting is September 21st, 2026, with hostesses Toni Anderson, Marti Windholz, and Nicole Gagnoung.—Sent in by Secretary Terri Collins.
